Profile

I am a graduate student in the History M.A. program at California State University, Bakersfield, specializing in Luso-African studies. I hold a B.A. in Anthropology and currently work as an archaeological technician for ASM Affiliates, where I have two years of experience in surveying, excavation, monitoring, and historic records research across California and Nevada. My work includes outreach to Native American communities as well as archival and special collections practice.

I plan to pursue a Ph.D. in order to further develop my research on Portuguese colonialism in Africa. I am interested in combining anthropological field work with colonial archival searches to contribute original scholarship to the field and to help expand the academic discourse around modern African history, independence movements, and decolonization.
